

Last night under the stars

The FIQ delegates got ready to spend the last night under the stars in a good mood.

The experience of the last few evenings having done its work, they were better equipped than ever to confront the cold and wind that had again set in.

An historic encampment

The historic encampment of the care professionals was dismantled at 10:00 on Friday, June 11. The Federation activists would have spent 78 hours in front of the National Assembly in order to remind the MNAs that it is crucial and urgent to reach a settlement in the current negotiations. The FIQ still hopes that a settlement can be reached before the summer, in spite of the end of Parliament's session.

Waiting for the negotiation blitz

The president of the Conseil du trésor announced on Thursday that they want to start a negotiation blitz, a sign that she is prepared to make the needed effort to sign an agreement. The FIQ representatives are now waiting to hear when these new discussions will start. However, there is no question for the care professionals of accepting a settlement which would mean little significant improvement or a setback in their working conditions which are already inhuman.

“Making the professions in the health sector more attractive will automatically have an impact on the attraction and retention of care professionals who adore their work, but can no longer practice it at the risk of their health.”

Régine Laurent,
President of the FIQ

Several media representatives helped to dismantle the encampment.

The activists, united and in solidarity, before leaving